Excerpt from Gotty and the Guv'nor: A True Narrative of Gotty's Doings Ashore Afloat, With an Account of His Voyage of Discovery on a Shrimping Bawley in the English Channel

They were three men gossiping on Leigh Jetty, and it chanced that I put my question more particularly to the tall man with a square face and white trousers; He stood bargaining for the loan of a basket with the proprietress of a ginger-beer shop; "There's a man," shouted Gotty, "what ain't never eaten any butter"; A short man carrying an empty sack; I stood on the crowded jetty jammed beside an old hawker; "Yes," said the good soul, lifting her apron to remove the first tear I had seen glistening on that happy face; The owner of the "Jane" had offered to sell that vessel for 50; Jest sat on the cabin top, grumble, grumble, grumble, all day long; Lights in the old fishing village proved strangely welcome and companionable; Insisted on balancing a stout oak box on his head, and carrying a piece of leather luggage in each hand; They were a genial group of mariners, and Mr. Rawson sat in the centre, a picture of cherubic amiability.
