World War II strikes, and what Carter wants more than anything before he goes off to war is for Allie to say “yes” to wearing his ring, “yes” to waiting for him to come home. But Allie has other plans, and feels led by God to take her place in the mission fields. She won’t commit to Carter . . . at least not right now. She tells him the thought of staying in her hometown without exploring her dreams feels like crossing “a bridge to nowhere.” As life takes them in different directions, will their love hold true, or will God lead them down unseen paths than neither could have expected? Written in honor of her brother who was among those injured or killed in World War II, author Lorena Estep gives us a heartfelt tale of love and loss in the middle of a country at war.
