Outsourcing at the Speed of Business Mike Johnson, Bodil Jones, Frank Casale
'Outsourcing at the Speed of Business' focuses on the need to have a comprehensive outsourcing strategy that fits individual business requirements and provides support on the decision-making process as to what functions should be outsourced. Outsourcing isn't new, but it has developed rapidly over recent years into a complete and profitable business solution for organizations that buy outsourcing services. When the outsourcing agreement is properly managed and maintained, this has allowed these organizations to concentrate on their own core competencies. However, when it isn't managed competently, it may cost firms substantial time and resources to put things right. Outsourcing is now poised to offer a whole new range of options and benefits to the biggest and the smartest organizations. Essential for firms looking to outsource functions that are not key to their own competitive edge. Functions discussed include: ICT infrastructure, support and maintenance; human resource duties; payroll and facilities management.
