Finding The Trail To Love: Two Stories About Two Men, Two Women And Two Horses Victoria Otto
Loving The Wrong Soldier When a German immigrant family finds a stray and injured horse during the Civil War, they take it back to their barn to heal its gunshot wound. Later, they find its owner who is also injured. The family is anti-slavery and seeing the soldier in dark blue pants, they consider him, at the very least, to be on their side. This is a romantic and incredibly beautiful story of love and devotion, between the horse and the soldier as well as the oldest daughter of the family. Woman Alone On The Oregon Trail: God Is My Only Companion Against all advice, a newly-certified woman doctor from back east travels alone on the Oregon Trail, headed for California to help a man she met through correspondence and to assist him in nursing sick Native Americans through a virulent smallpox epidemic. She also plans on helping him with a school as well, and spreading the word and love of God. Many obstacles lie in her path but she finds comfort in God on the lonely trail, and with her horse as the only living being by her side, the solitary journey begins.
