Sophia's eyes grew wide with surprise before she found herself melting into the kiss. At the surface, she felt like this was wrong. They had just met few hours ago, yet, deep down, she could feel a connection so deep that her heart tightened with affection. The kiss was more than carnal pleasure. She could feel it in the way he held her. There was just something different about it. She found herself kissing back, her lips moving in perfect harmony with his. Her lips parted for a moment and his tongue found its way into her mouth, making her moan ever so gently. His body was pressed against her, a fire spreading through it, warding off any of the cold she had once felt. Their hips locked together and she could feel his growing erection press against her thigh. Her heart raced and her cheeks reddened. Did she really want to do this? Her mind raced with her options but in the end, she found she couldn't pull away.
